Overview

Scottlab/rootbeer project progress report signifies that our company has two contributors that are making significantly more contributions than the rest of our employees.
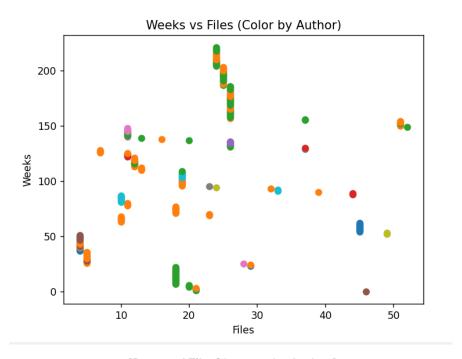

The Problem

Many of our employees are not contributing enough to the project in comparison to two of our employees. Indicating that some of the developers may have left the project.

The Solution

Reduce expenditures by pausing our developer hiring process for this particular project. Our current team size is sufficient to continue making satisfactory progress without hiring additional help. Additionally, have the developers undergo performance reviews in order to further improve our understanding of whose contributions are exceptional.

Highlights

Our data suggests that, in recent weeks, two contributors have made significant progress in comparison to their peers. In addition, the data implies that the team has recently focused on fewer files than previous weeks.

Keys to Success

Add incentives for our current developers in order to retain their expertise on this project based on their individual performance reviews.
